Dear Officer Taylor:

I am Sabrina Cullinan, a staff member at Next Level Sports. Next Level Sports is McKinney's newest indoor sports facility offering leagues, tournaments, and classes in various sports. Many players struggle with raising the necessary funds to compete in the tournaments and we would like to hold a raffle fundraiser to support them.

Our hope is to give each player the opportunity to sell raffle calendars. These calendars will have daily prize drawings. I have been working with the Chamber of Commerce and we now have the commitment from five local businesses to offer gift card prizes. The goal is to secure thirty businesses in total. The businesses currently involved are:

- Butcher Board Sandwich Shop
- Tilly's Homemade Pies
- Sweet Creations Candy Shoppe
- Lucy's Lemonade
- Interiors by Kate

Next Level Sports realizes the importance of adhering to current laws regarding raffles. Please let me know what the procedure is for obtaining permission to run the fundraiser. I have enclosed a sample calendar design. Once approved, I hope one of our players finds you and offers you a raffle calendar!

Sincerely,

Mom and Dad
Our House
Phoenix, AZ 85001

Dear Mom and Dad:

I am writing to let you know how much fun I am having at Happy Tails Ranch. At first, I was scared but everyone here is so nice and smells like bacon. They take me on long W-A-L-K-S and let me chase after the B-A-L-L. It makes me so happy to be out here with all of my friends. I am glad not to be cooped in a crate all day waiting for you to come home.

Happy Tails Ranch really has everything a dog could beg for. The wide-open space, called the Corral, along with a friendly and caring staff, make coming here a real treat. Speaking of treats, the Chuckwagon comes through every day to bring us snacks. The meals are delicious and nutritious. I heard that they are even for sale to bring home. After playing in the Corral, ranchers take the time to clean me and my friends off with a quick bath. During my last bath, I overheard someone talking about the other grooming services that are available here. Each stylist is certified to take complete care of me and can perform the following services:

- 🐾 Natural shampoo bath
- 🐾 Blow dry
- 🐾 Brush-out
- 🐾 Breed specific haircut and trim
- 🐾 Nail trimming
- 🐾 Ear and teeth cleaning

All in all, this place makes my tail wag. I hope to keep coming back here and take advantage of the countless products and services available at the Ranch. I even spotted a snazzy dog collar and leash I really love.

Your Best Friend,

Buddy

The Dangers of Concussions

Concussions are very common in sports and the ways to avoid and treat them have become widely known. This report will define what a concussion is and describe the typical ways it occurs. Discussion about the increase in the public's awareness of the injury and popular treatments will be detailed. The Sports Concussion Institute maintains a complete catalog of information, and much of the information in this report was gained from their website.

A concussion is a trauma to the head that causes a brain injury. The human brain floats inside the skull surrounded by cerebral fluid. When the head is hit hard enough for the brain to strike the inside of the skull, a concussion occurs. Both a blow to the head as well as whiplash can cause this to happen. There may or may not be physical evidence that the head was hurt, such as a scratch, cut, or bruise, but a concussion may still have occurred. A person may not lose consciousness. According to the YouTube video "Brain 101: What's a Concussion," "less than one in ten people who get a concussion ever lose consciousness." (Brain 101: What's a Concussion)

Knowing the symptoms of a concussion is critical in the diagnosis, and the sooner someone is diagnosed, the easier their recovery will be. They symptoms may include nausea, dizziness, a feeling of foginess, confusion, or a headache. Each person and injury event vary, so no two concussions are exactly the same. If a concussion is not treated, the person may be at a higher risk for getting another concussion, and their cognitive ability will be impaired.

Many people may assume that the most common way to get a concussion in sports is by the ball striking a player's head. For instance, in soccer heading the ball (or purposefully hitting the ball with your head to keep the ball in play) can cause concussions. Soccer balls are heavy and if not done properly, heading the ball may cause injury. However, since soccer balls no longer absorb water and get as heavy as they once did, more concussions happen when a player collides with another player or a goal post. In fact, "among high school athletes, concussions are most often caused by contact with an opponent, a teammate, the ground, or a piece of equipment or object in the playing area." (Concussion and Sports) The player may not even have any contact with the head and yet still undergo a trauma to the brain. If the body is forcefully jolted, the brain may move and strike the inner walls of the skull.

Avoiding a concussion altogether is the best way to bypass any further injury or deal with any of the negative side effects. Players should use the right protective equipment for the sport, follow safety rules, and practice good sportsmanship. However, the mere fact that participants are aware of concussions reduces the risk involved in playing sports:

In the world of sports and recreational activities, there has been a huge shift in awareness of the potential for, and consequences of, head injuries among participants. Protective helmets and helmets with built-in impact detectors are being developed, along with mouth guards that absorb most of the force from a hit to the jaw. There is now protective headgear available for soccer, lacrosse, basketball, skiing, snowboarding, horseback riding, and skateboarding, as well as safer helmets for football, baseball, and ice hockey. (Stoler and Albers)

The treatment of a concussion is fairly simple. The injured person should merely rest, and avoiding activities that require concentration, such as reading or using a computer, is recommended. If the person with a concussion is an athlete, they should also abstain from playing their sport until they are fully healed. If an athlete returns to the game too quickly, a condition known as Chronic Traumatic Encephalopathy, or CTE, may occur: "It features the degeneration of brain tissue and accumulation of abnormal protein." (Esty and Shifflett) Permanent damage to the brain is something a person should avoid at all costs.

In conclusion, getting a concussion can make a person feel foggy and disoriented, and if not treated properly, can cause extensive damage. It is recommended that people who have had a concussion take necessary precautions to avoid getting injured again. Fortunately, equipment, such as headgear, is available to help lower the occurrence. Treatment is easy, and does not require any medications or hospital stays. Learning more about concussions can help any sports lover and athlete play safe.

Current Issues in Pet Adoption

If you are looking to add a furry companion to your life, adopting an animal from your local shelter or rescue group is an excellent option. Some people may feel wary of adopting, whether it's because they are looking for a specific breed or because they have been swayed by misinformation about shelter animals. Adoption has a full range of benefits, including decreasing the population of homeless dogs, creating more space in shelters, and reducing the demand that supports puppy mills. However, it is important to keep in mind that rescue dogs have their own unique challenges that should be considered and understood before adopting. There are many issues that a potential adopter should be aware of, including a dog's prior history, the age of the dog, and the dangers of pet adoption scams.

Few people would argue that adopting a dog is beneficial in a number of ways. One of the most persuasive reasons to adopt rather than buy a pet from a breeder or pet store is the fact that you are saving lives. Matt Bershadker, President and CEO of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, asserts that "Of the approximately 7.6 million companion animals entering animal shelters nationwide every year, approximately 2.7 million are euthanized." (Bershadker) By adopting a pet, you are not only saving the life of that particular animal—you are also freeing up space for another animal at the shelter. Many shelters around the country are grossly overcrowded, so the extra space can make a difference and offer another dog or cat a second chance at life. According to the ASPCA, the following table shows common ways dogs are adopted:

Table 1 Ways Dogs Are Adopted

Method of Adoption	Percentage of Dogs
Animal Shelter/Humane Society	23%
Friends/Relatives	20%
Breeder	34%
Stray	6%
Private Party	12%
Other	32%

People buy from breeders significantly more than animal shelters. While people may have specific reasons for preferring breeders, there are many benefits to using a shelter and saving an unwanted animal. Still, as with any major decision, it is important to do your research before taking a dog home.

Rescuing a dog has many rewards, but it may also present challenges. For instance, a person looking to adopt must be aware of the dog's past history to ensure it would be a good fit for their family. Samantha Bubar points out that "A big part of loving a rescue dog is understanding why they might behave the way they do." Some of the dogs from shelters have been abused and may still be deeply affected by this trauma. Dogs that have been neglected or homeless may become protective of their food; they may snarl or even bite if someone gets too close while they eat. This behavior sometimes prevents dogs from being adopted by families with small children. While many dogs outgrow the behavior after being in a safe home for a time, other dogs may always need to be given their space when they eat. A good shelter or adoption center will have observed the dog's behavior and will let you know if food aggression is an issue. Rescue dogs may also be fearful of their new owners or their surroundings for a while; they may be shy and afraid to come out of their shell, since they may not have ever known a loving environment. Training, positive reinforcement, and gentle exposure to whatever is scaring them can go along way toward improving this reaction. (Bubar) The most important point to keep in mind when you adopt a dog is that if you can empathize with them and understand where they have come from, then you will have a better chance at bonding with your new pet and working on any unfavorable behaviors.

The age of the dog in question must also be taken into consideration when you adopt. Some older dogs may be a bit more irritable than others. This is usually caused by pain, health issues, and possible loss of sight or hearing, which can make them jumpy. However, many senior dogs usually come trained and understand basic commands. (Pajer) Puppies on the other hand, will have much more energy and are less likely to be potty-trained than senior dogs. Families looking for a calmer dog with some preestablished training may prefer an older pet. In addition, many senior dogs are in great need of rescuing: "Shelters are overcrowded and unfortunately, older dogs are among the first to be euthanized if they aren't adopted in a timely manner." (Pajer) In addition, the following table shows the likelihood of being adopted by age group:

Table 2 Likelihood by Age Group

Age Group	Percent Adopted
Puppy	95.0%
Young	80.4%
Adult	75.5%
Senior	68.2%

This table clearly demonstrates that older dogs have the lowest chance of being adopted. (What Kinds of Pets Get Adopted?) Thinking about the age of the pet you adopt can be beneficial because it will allow you to decide what makes the most sense for your family and what kind of environment would be right for certain types of dogs. Whether you end up adopting an older or younger dog, keep in mind the distinct behaviors, challenges, and rewards that come with both.

Pet adoption scams are another issue that a potential adopter needs to understand as they begin their search for a new addition to the family. Unfortunately, these scams are on the rise. According to fraud.org, "Fraudsters are going after future pet owners by placing a false ad for pets online then scamming them into more money after they are emotionally invested in the cuddly ball of fuzz." (Pet Adoption Scams) A consumer sees a dog listed for sale online, usually on websites like craigslist.org or oodle.com. The offer may seem too good to be true, especially if someone is giving away a purebred puppy for free or for a low price. After the consumer sends money to the alleged dog seller, he or she is informed that more money is needed to pay for a ventilated shipping crate, pet insurance, extra shots, and so on. However, the entire ad is a scam. The pictures of the pet posted on the ad are usually taken from the Internet, and the seller doesn't have any pets for sale at all. Sometimes, victims of this or similar scams don't realize that they have been tricked until they have already lost hundreds of dollars. Following a few simple rules can help you avoid a pet adoption scam: never send money for a pet purchase unless you have seen the pet in person, be wary of out-of-town sellers, find out as much as you can about the seller, and do not agree to requests for a wire transfer for money. No matter how good an online deal may seem, adopting locally is still one of the safest and cheapest ways to obtain your new pet.

Adopting a dog is extremely rewarding. Helping an unwanted dog adjust to a new home can be a great experience for you and your entire family. However, learning about the challenges that rescue dogs may present provides a strong foundation for understanding what kind of dog you want and how to deal with an animal that may have had a difficult past. In addition, having awareness of common pet adoption scams can protect you from deceit and ensure that you safely find the dog that is a perfect match for you and your family.
